“We have been working very closely with professional, top-class players such as Joel Matip and Alphonse Areola to ensure we capture the entire football action in its entirety so we can really get a real-life simulation feel,” said Matt Mobeen, FIFA Technical Director. From tackling to punching, grappling and flying challenges, the goalkeepers with the highest save rate will receive unique Pro Player data depending on their specific position, while goalkeepers will perform better in more demanding shooting situations. In addition, FIFA 22 introduces a new type of save-to-load mechanic in saves and corner kicks, allowing goalkeepers to save and load a shooting position at any moment. They’ll also receive unique Save Skills depending on their particular position and have several new timing-dependent reactions to the ball, such as the ability to make double saves. The game developers behind FIFA have written an informative article detailing the new development for FIFA on their official site.
