Ask A Brewery Expert: The EHPA's "PSA" Roundabout The European Health and Consumer Protection Agency (EHPA) aims to help European consumers choose the safest products. The EHPA also warns food producers to not use misleading health claims to promote food products. As of January 2013, the EHPA has proposed a simple brand-based consumer food safety label that highlights the negative effects of certain products on health. The EHPA has proposed a "PSA" (Product Submitted for Analysis) roundabout that would prevent companies from "health-washing" their products with fictitious or deceptive health claims. The term "PSA" has been around for a while, but this is the first time it appears in Europe. Similar to the A or B stickers given to cigarette packages, a PSA roundabout gives a product an indication of whether or not it poses a health risk to consumers. Each product would receive a different color of "PSA" roundabout in order to showcase the quality or safety of a given product. However, instead of being mandatory in the EU, the EHPA's proposed "PSA" roundabout, which is still in the consultation phase, would be voluntary. According to the EHPA, this would allow companies to take the time needed to ensure their products meet safety standards. If a company wished to employ a "PSA" roundabout, they would be able to add a logo to any product they wished. Some of the logos that the EHPA has proposed for companies are: "Harmful", "IARC" (
