In earlier versions of Alfresco, I was able to add a folder and have the folder listing appear on the Home page as a "folder" instead of a listing of files. I'm not seeing this option in 4.2. A: A good place to start is at the docs, which are generally pretty complete: The thing that makes your question a little tricky is that the folders are not actually in the "home page", they appear on the file list. So it is not like you are asking to display a folder as a "browse" link, you are simply asking to display the contents of a folder as a "file list" element. You would have to build a custom renderer to do this if you wanted to, but I think you might want to just use the existing "folder" renderer instead. Robots are very good at repetitive tasks. Especially when it is automated. But humans are very good at non-repetitive tasks. So, we should merge the two. Is it possible to teach a robot to interpret human language? A robot can still understand a human language. We would simply ask it to simulate a robot. A typical robot user interface is a combination of gestures and voice commands, and it works very well. But it is a very limited form of communication. Is human language a universal language? In many ways, we think that human language is a very localized phenomenon. It is the language that we speak to each other. When we talk
